

J. DAVID MCMAHAN

SUMMARY OF QUALIFICATIONS AND INTERESTS

Until retirement from the State of Alaska in May 2013, I served as Alaska's State Archaeologist and a Deputy State Historic Preservation Officer. With BA and MA degrees in anthropology from the University of Tennessee and more than 40 years in professional archaeology, my interests and skills are diverse. Cross-training and certifications include forensic hair and fiber microscopy, forensic anthropology (police instructor), advanced SCUBA, marine safety and survival, hazardous waste operations, wilderness medicine, and historic preservation law. With the State's responsibility for managing historic shipwrecks on state submerged lands along more than half the nation's coastline, I played a key role in bringing marine archaeology to Alaska and worked with federal, academic, and private marine archaeologists to investigate several of Alaska's historically important shipwrecks. With a background in forensic anthropology and long-time advisor to the Office of the Alaska State Medical Examiner, I helped solve some of Alaska's most gruesome crimes. I continue to hold a federal appointment as "on call" forensic anthropologist for DMORT Region 10, deployable in mass disasters.

Internationally, I am currently involved with joint U.S.-Russian research projects in Alaska and Siberia, and have become known for involvement with the archaeology of Russian America. To this end, I serve as President of the International Association of Specialists on Russian America (IASRA), and am a Board Member of the Alaska-Siberia Research Center (ASRC). I have written a number of successful grant proposals and have served as Principal Investigator on projects throughout Russia and Alaska. These include both marine and terrestrial archaeological investigations, as well as workshops, conferences, and symposia. In addition to an extensive publications list, I have served as keynote speaker, session chair, organizer, and participant in conferences devoted to topics such as maritime heritage, historic and prehistoric archaeology, forensic anthropology, arctic sciences, history, and climate change. Awards include the Alaska Anthropological Association's "Outstanding Service Award" (2006). I live near Nashville with my wife Patty. We have a second home in central Wisconsin, and grandchildren in Wisconsin and California.

PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

- Archaeological Consultant, Owner and Senior Archaeologist (2013-2018)
Employer: McMahan Consulting
Description: As the owner of a small consulting company, I conduct archaeological and forensic investigations. Clients have included engineering companies, state and federal agencies, tribes, and the Native American Rights Fund. I currently serve as PI for a multi-year National Science Foundation shipwreck / survivor camp project in SE Alaska (, and serve as the consulting archaeologist for the Nondalton Tribal Council. The latter is a cooperative project between the Nondalton Tribal Council and National Park Service.
- Alaska State Archaeologist, Deputy SHPO (2003-2013)
Employer: Alaska Department of Natural Resources, Office of History and Archaeology (Anchorage, Alaska)
Description: Served as the State of Alaska's expert in archaeology, representing the State on program-wide issues that include both terrestrial and submerged cultural resources. Responsibilities included: oversight of the statewide site inventory program (including the development of an integrated business system); the oversight of planning and quality review of archaeological projects; final review of professional papers and publications; participation in or supervision of archaeological investigations; development and review of agreement documents (MOAs, MOUs, PAs, Cooperative Agreements, etc.); permit review and inspections; inventory and mitigation assessments; participation in SHPO reviews of determinations of eligibility; authorship of reports and publications for both academic and public audiences; oversight of cultural resource management for hazardous substance spills; oversight of and participation in public education and cultural stewardship programs, including regular public presentations, outreach, and collaborations with other organizations; investigation and management of submerged resources; providing technical guidance on a wide range of issues (including cemetery issues, laboratory analysis, and hazardous materials spills); representing the state's historic preservation interests as a Technical Work Group advisor to the Governor's Subcommittee on Climate Change; teaching workshops and classes on historic preservation, heritage issues, and advanced crime scene investigation; developing work plans and budgets for archaeological investigations; carrying out archaeological projects to completion, including publication of final reports; providing technical assistance to other agencies, tribes, and local organizations (such as historical societies and museums); and developing liaisons and collaborative working relationships with other agencies, tribes, and communities. I have assisted the Office of the State Medical Examiner and law enforcement agencies with human remains exhumations, autopsies, field investigations, laboratory analyses and advanced criminal investigation workshops. Since 1988, a co-worker and I have produced approximately 150-200 forensic reports (either individually or jointly authored). I supervised two senior state archaeologists, two Natural Resource Technicians, and interns or part-time employees. As a Deputy Chief / SHPO, I regularly supervise all Office of History and Archaeology staff (archaeologists, historians, architectural historians, administrative staff, etc.) while the Chief is out of the office. I have represented the state's cultural resource interests during responses to hazardous substance spills, including the EXXON-VALDEZ (1989) and SELENDANG AYU (2004) oil spills. I have prepared numerous grant proposals and received funding from outside sources for projects in Alaska and Russia.

- Forensic Anthropologist / DMORT / GS-13 (2003-present)
Employer: U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, National Disaster Medical System
(On-call position, concurrent with above)
Description: I have an appointment as Forensic Anthropologist for the Federal Region 10 (Alaska, Oregon, Idaho, and Washington) Disaster Mortuary Operational Response Team (DMORT), subject to deployment as a uniformed federal employee in the event of a mass disaster within the United States. During an emergency response, DMORT's work under the guidance of local authorities by providing technical assistance and personnel to recover, identify, and process deceased victims.
- Senior Archaeologist / Program Manager (2001-2003)
Employer: Alaska Department of Natural Resources, Office of History and Archaeology
(Anchorage, Alaska)
Description: Essentially performed the duties of the State Archaeologist described above prior to formal appointment. These included the issuance of permits for archaeological investigations on state lands; preparation and review of compliance documents and research designs; oversight of the state's site inventory program; providing counsel to the State Medical Examiner and law enforcement agencies on cemetery and human remains issues; advising the State Historic Preservation Officer on archaeological, cemetery, and human remains issues; investigating issues relating to historic shipwrecks and submerged aircraft; developing research designs or work plans and preparing budgets for archaeological projects; and representing the state's cultural resource interests during responses to hazardous materials spills.

- Project Archaeologist (1984-2001)
Employer: Alaska Department of Natural Resources, Office of History and Archaeology
 (Anchorage, Alaska)
Description: Planned and performed archaeological and anthropological investigations, including technical research, on behalf of the state to insure compliance with federal and state guidelines during public construction planning. This involved carrying out archaeological projects to completion, including publication of final reports. Provided forensic counsel to the State Crime Laboratory and State Medical Examiner. I provided SHPO oversight during the cleanup following the EXXON-VALDEZ (1989) oil spill.
- Project Archaeologist (1976-1983)
Employer: University of Tennessee, Knoxville
Description: Served as project archaeologist for the Anthropology Department and McClung Museum at the University of Tennessee while a graduate student there. Employment ranged from half-time (winters) to full-time (summers), with responsibilities that increased with experience and education. This involved carrying out archaeological projects to completion, including publication of final reports. Supervised field and laboratory crews during data recovery in conjunction with public construction, prepared final reports.
- Seasonal Archaeologist / GS-7 (1977, 1978)
Employer: U.S. National Park Service, Alaska Region
Description: Performed archaeological reconnaissance (site inventory, testing, and evaluation) as part of a small team on the Arctic Slope of Alaska. This also involved some work at the “Bishop’s House,” Sitka National Historical Park, in 1978. Required the use of inflatable rafts and helicopters for crew transport, as well as long term camping in remote settings.
- Seasonal Archaeologist / State of Tennessee (1973, 1975-1976)
Employer: Tennessee Division of Archaeology, Nashville
Description: Participated in supervised data recovery at several prehistoric and historic sites; conducted supervised and unsupervised site survey in the Cumberland River valley.
